No, from my experience usually they'll bite when either playing or if you're giving them food and they miss the food in your hand.

Um trust me I have had five different cat at my farm, my rescue, yes I rescued her with her mom from right off a street, only bit me when our dog scared her, no I did get any shots, I was fine, I only have one cat right now he was dropped off at our house and was an inside cat, but not here and when he came inside my brother was petting him on the belly three different times and each time the cat didn't like it and it bit him, my moms friend has about twenty or so cats, my great aunt and uncle have around fifty to a hundred, and my mom has another friend who has two cats, my great grandma has one, and my grandma has one, and my other grandma had five, but now she only has one. So imagine if all my relatives died and they left me their cats, holy smoke. Would you believe it, I would have like a million, oh and my friend has three, with some more on the way. Imagine that I really know a lot of cats. I sometimes help pick names, right now I have named three cats in my life, I also forgot I am adopted so I had a cat named rain, when I was with my birth parents, he was a sweet cat.

actually imagine's right cats can and do bite for various of reasons. Every cats personality is different and so you can't just go by the cats you own. I own cats and one of mines is very sweet and loves to be on people and only ever bites when playing, however our other cat (a rescue) does not like people at all, it prefers to be left alone and will even attack when given food so we have to be careful. I've lived on a farm my entire life and through those years we've rescued a lot of cats, and i can tell you not one cat that i've ever owned did not bite for at least one of these reasons. (1. When feeling threatened,2 when feeling playful/hunting, 3. Sometimes they even have a tendancy to bite if they have a neurological disorder. And 4 sometimes they're just plain crazy and do not want to be disturbed.
My point is that you are right in saying cats bite when feeling threatened, but you're wrong in saying that is the only reason that they would ever bite. I'm not trying to be mean but quite frankly i didn't like you accusing Imagine of doing something to provoke the cat (you implied this by saying he" must've done something because cats are the sweetest creatures and only bite when threatened" no i'm not an animal expert, but you aren't as well so maybe don't act like just because you've owned a cats before that you know everything about them.

I felt i needed to say something
I want to be clear any animal can be dangerous, it just depends on the circumstances.

Usually you don't have to get rabies shots for bites from personal pets because they more often than not are up to date on their rabies vaccinations themselves. You should only get rabies shots if you come into contact with a wild animal or a stray, or if you're in foreign country and get bit, like Imagine is.

If you're ever bitten by an animal you don't know, go to the hospital. The sooner you get your rabies shots, the better. Once you start manifesting symptoms, it's next to impossible to help you. Not all animals are rabid, but it's better safe than sorry.

Editing my statement, it will be impossible to help you. The only alternative to rabies pre-exposure shots is death

Thanks Tiger and Ishmael. I do realize this may have been my own fault, however, the cat was acting friendly beforehand so I don't really know. A video will be coming out soon about how and where to get shots in Egypt in case anyone else gets bitten here. You are correct Ishmael, if you develop rabies it's fatal and there is no cure. That's why it's necessary to get shots.

Yikes, that sounds scary. I've been bit before, and keeping it clean is really important.

@Jacquelyn, every cat is different, and plus, a barn cat will probably be less friendly than a house cat. Some cats even bite when they're happy, it just really depends on the individual cat.

Thanks, Ishmael. Funny story, my mom actually got bit by a wild dog a month ago (she's fine) so we know what to do for this. I scrubbed it for fifteen minutes in warm water, and then cleaned it with an alcohol pad that stung like heck

yeah it's p a i n f u l
